

ADVERTISEMENT

ENTERTAINMENT & ARTS

Black graduates make up just 1% of ArtCenter alumni. Can an exhibition fix that?

Commercial photographer Barbara DuMetz graduated from ArtCenter in 1973. She poses for a portrait at the school's exhibition celebrating the 300 black alumni in its 90-year history. (Jason Armond / Los Angeles Times)

By MAKEDA EASTER | STAFF WRITER

MARCH 2, 2020 | 6 AM

Three hundred. That's the estimated number of black students who have graduated from the Pasadena-based ArtCenter College of Design in its 90-year history.

The statistic — that black students make up only about 1% of all alumni — was inspiration for the school's exhibition "90/300: A Measure of Representation, in Celebration of Cultural Influence."

The exhibition includes three separate projects: a video survey of alumni work and interviews produced by Elizabeth Gray Bayne, a retrospective of commercial photographer Barbara DuMetz, and a group exhibition curated by mixed-media, sculpture and installation artist Devin Troy Strother.

Strother was among the alumni who organized "90/300" in collaboration with the school's Center for Diversity, Equity and Inclusion in Art and Design, which launched in 2018. As ArtCenter's Vice President and chief diversity officer Aaron Bruce said, he realized the school "really didn't have a lot of branding that was facing the African American community."

The exhibition was a way to "inspire the next generation of young African American artists and designers," Bruce said. "They really needed access to images and individuals that reflected their identity and that was incredibly difficult to find in one location."

SUBSCRIBERS ARE READING

CALIFORNIA

Newsom orders bars closed in 7 California counties, including L.A., due to coronavirus spread

SCIENCE

Inside the body, the coronavirus is even more sinister than scientists had realized

CALIFORNIA

L.A. County faces 'critical moment' as coronavirus cases keep surging

POLITICS

Trump struggles as furor grows over reported Russian bounty offer to kill U.S. troops

WORLD & NATION

In 'God, guns and Trump' country, simmering doubts about the president

ADVERTISEMENT

NTNFTY

LATEST ENTERTAINMENT & ARTS

TELEVISION

The five TV shows we can't get enough of this week

2 hours ago

ENTERTAINMENT & ARTS

NINE THREE HUNDRED

We are honored to celebrate the 90-year journey of ArtCenter Black alumni. Ninety years of their creativity, unique lived experiences and identities continue to contribute to an important legacy of art and design.

We stand on the shoulders of those who have designed, created and contributed to culture before us. Their tenacity and triumph, in the face of adversity and exclusion, serve as symbols for coming generations of the brilliant future that is possible. Dedicated champions of change and innovation, these artists and designers lift our voices, framing a history of self-determination. Having chosen a path of creative freedom, ArtCenter's Black alumni serve as a beacon of light, showing us what is achievable when individuals are able to overcome the barriers of invisibility and silence.

Aaron L. Bruce, PhD
Vice President and Chief Diversity Officer
ArtCenter College of Design

© Center for Diversity, Equity & Inclusion

Aaron Bruce is the vice president and chief diversity officer at ArtCenter. (Jason Armond / Los Angeles Times)

Strother began working on the exhibition last fall, researching the list of black graduates and culling it down to active artists who practiced in L.A.

Although the show opened in mid-February, Strother pushed for it to go up another time, comparing the staging of a black art show during Black History Month to a "back-handed compliment."

"The biggest months within the art world are September, October, November and January. ... Why not reserve this big event for one of those months, instead of the shortest month of the year," Strother said.

The exhibition is one of the first at the school's new downtown space, which opened last year in what had been the Main Museum, Bruce said. "It just so happened that it was in February. But I also think it lends itself to exhibiting the history of African Americans in a way that has typically not been seen."

The exhibition is also a way to address some of the myths around the viability of art as a career, which could be one reason why the black student population remained low.

"The stereotype associated with being a starving artist may linger in the minds of many African American families," Bruce said. "Although many African American artists and designers may have wanted to go to art school, they may have been deterred from pursuing a career in art design by family members or friends, or guidance counselors or teachers who said no."

"One of the reasons why we're also doing this exhibition is to actually demonstrate that there are people who are African American who have had thriving careers," he added.

Barriers within the school system itself may also have kept black students away.

Strother wasn't shocked by the statistic, adding that the school had only recently begun taking steps toward inclusion. He recalled an early 2000s experience in high school when an ArtCenter recruiter discouraged him from applying. "It was like they were very much an elitist school and they wanted to keep it this private institution," he said.

He also recounted experiences as a student — not having a black instructor, not learning to paint figures with darker skin tones — that made him feel othered.

For Strother, curating the ArtCenter exhibition was a way to show "you can be young and black and actually have a working career within the art world and still be critical of the way institutions work," Strother said. "You don't have to tiptoe around things that are inconsistent."

Think you've seen 'The Princess Bride'? Not like this

June 29, 2020

MUSIC

Dr. Dre and Nicole Young are divorcing after 24 years of marriage

June 29, 2020

MOVIES

Review: The U.S. has become less welcoming to LGBTQ refugees. A new doc depicts their plight

June 29, 2020

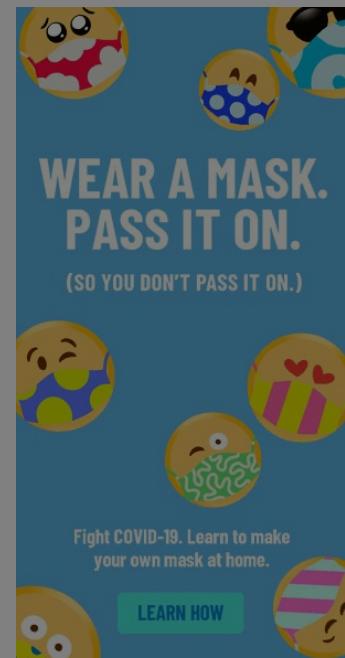

ENTERTAINMENT & ARTS

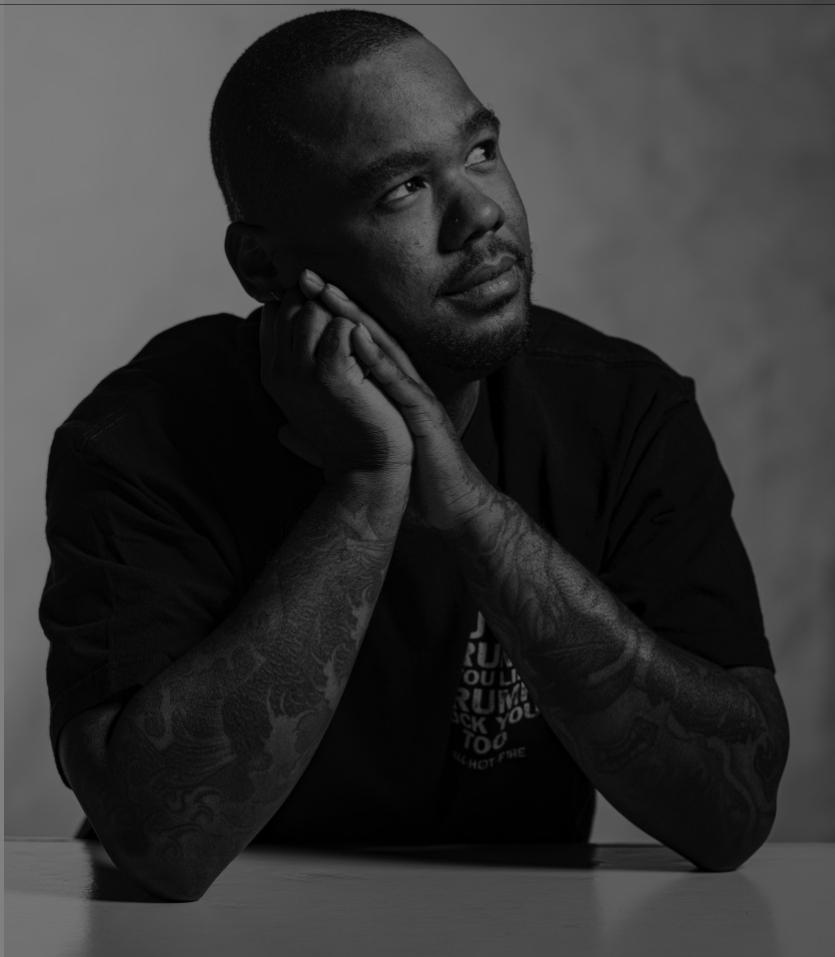

The show will not go on: Broadway extends its shutdown until January

June 29, 2020

ADVERTISEMENT

ADVERTISEMENT

Devin Troy Strother is curator of ArtCenter's "90/300" exhibition. (Everard Williams)

As a student in the 1990s, artist Edgar Arceneaux, whose work is featured in the exhibition, started a black student union with another student.

"We were petitioning for greater representation of black art ... to try to get more people of color to be on faculty but also just to celebrate with each other since there were a few students there of color."

Although he called his ArtCenter education "exceptional," Arceneaux felt that true change should come from inside the school system. "They should do this themselves, but the truth is most of the time these cultural shifts that happen on campuses are generated by students," he said.

A 1973 graduate of ArtCenter, DuMetz said she was the only black woman in her photography program at the time. She didn't "remember any adverse situation or treatment," she said. "I never really felt discriminated against."

She credited ArtCenter with launching her 40-year career in commercial photography, where she's worked with some of the biggest names in black entertainment.

"To be honest, I did not do well in school. I did not do well because I did not have anyone there and upholding me during that time."

National news. West coast perspective.

Your support makes our journalism possible.

1 year for $196 $98

Cancel anytime.

SUBSCRIBE

Los Angeles Times

The state of what's next.

Already a subscriber? Login

Print subscriber? Activate digital access

SEGMENT

Barbara DuMetz's photographs hang on the walls at ArtCenter's "90/300" exhibit. (Jason Armond / Los Angeles Times)

According to ArtCenter's most recent demographic breakdown in 2018, black students made up 2% of the student body.

Bruce acknowledged that the numbers could be much higher, and he sees the exhibition as one step toward bringing in more black students to the school.

The Center for Diversity, Equity and Inclusion in Art and Design also launched other initiatives including working with the school to increase financial resources for students, starting conversations around culturally responsive critique in classrooms, and planning a study-abroad program in Kenya.

"I don't think we're hiding from the fact that those numbers are low," Bruce said. "It's important to be transparent and upfront and honest about the history of the center."

'90/300: A Measure of Representation, In Celebration of Cultural Influence'

Where: ArtCenter DTLA, 114 W. 4th St., Los Angeles

When: Noon-5 p.m. Tuesday-Saturday, through Mar. 13

Admission: Free

Info: artcenter.edu

ENTERTAINMENT & ARTS ARTS THINGS TO DO MUSEUMS & ART

≡✉ Your essential guide to the arts in L.A.

Get Carolina A. Miranda's weekly newsletter for what's happening, plus openings, critics' picks and more.

Enter Email Address

SIGN ME UP

You may occasionally receive promotional content from the Los Angeles Times.

Makeda Easter

Twitter

Instagram

Email

Facebook

Makeda Easter is an arts reporter. She started at the Los Angeles Times in 2016 and received her bachelor's degree in science, technology and international affairs at Georgetown University.

MORE FROM THE LOS ANGELES TIMES

TELEVISION

What's on TV
Tuesday: Mt. Everest on National Geographic

59 minutes ago

COMPANY TOWN

CNN Center is for sale, but employees will remain in Atlanta

1 hour ago

TELEVISION

Rashida Tlaib has a plan to beat Trump: 'We can out-work the hate agenda'

1 hour ago

COMPANY TOWN

An L.A. management firm says it believes in Black Lives Matter. Former employees say otherwise

June 29, 2020

How Dogs Cry For Help: 3 Warning Signs Your Dogs Is Crying For Help
DR. MARTY

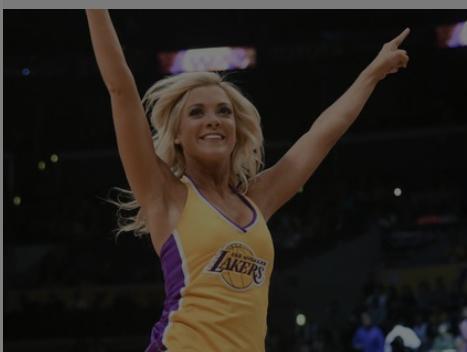

3 Ways Your Cat Asks for Help
DR. MARTY

Seniors in the United States Are Wearing This Popular $49 Health Smartwatch
SMARTWATCH

These Twins Were Named "Most Beautiful in the World," Wait Till You See Them Now
POST FUN

Fastest Shrinking Cities In America: City In California Tops The List
UNPUZZLE FINANCE

California: Say Bye To Expensive Solar Panels If You Own A Home in Pasadena
ENERGYBILLCRUNCHER

The content you see here is paid for by the advertiser or content provider whose link you click on, and is recommended to you by Revcontent. As the leading platform for native advertising and content recommendation, Revcontent uses interest based targeting to select content that we think will be of particular interest to you. We encourage you to view our Privacy Policy and your opt out options here.

Got it, thanks!

Remove Content Link?

Please choose a reason below:

- Fake News
- Misleading
- Not Interested
- Offensive
- Repetitive

Submit Cancel

ADVERTISEMENT

Subscribe for unlimited access

Follow Us

eNewspaper

Find/Post Jobs

For the Record

Place an Ad

Why L.A. Times?

Crossword

Obituaries

Podcasts

Recipes

Bestcovery

About/Contact

L.A. Times Careers

Manage Subscription

Reprints and Permissions

Site Map

Get Unlimited Digital Access
$1 for 4 weeks | $98 for 1 year

SUBSCRIBE

